

The Thames

An art exhibition by Daniel Worth at Paul McPherson gallery

1st – 12th of November 2011

Paintings and sculpture by Australian artist Daniel Worth inspired by his time spent exploring along the river Thames. This exhibition focuses on the mercurial nature of the river: how it changes its colour and presence with the seasons, weather, location, day, night, high and low tide. Various artworks have been created from searching on the river banks for discarded materials to recycle into surfaces to paint on and objects to use for sculpture.

Opening night reception Thursday the 3rd Nov 6 - 9pm

77 Lassell Street, Greenwich, London, SE10 9PJ

For more information, please contact: info@danielworthart.com

Originally from Brisbane, Australia, Daniel moved to Melbourne in 2006 to Study Visual Arts. During this time he supported himself by working as an apprentice bronze sculptor, creating pavement art and painting murals. Daniel has been travelling and creating artwork in Europe since September 2008. So far he has hosted eleven solo exhibitions, received several art awards and exhibited widely in group shows in Australia, China, London and New York. He is now living and pursuing his arts practice full time in London.

www.danielworthart.com

www.paulmcpersongallery.com