

The GRANT BRADLEY gallery, Bristol, is showing the entire collection of Cliff Hanley's paintings of Palestine, his reaction to his first visit there in 2002. He says, " These paintings are my close-up response to the reality of life in Palestine today: a beautiful country circumscribed by the worst kind of repression visited by one minority tribe on the majority, its cousins .

1st February - 17th March 2007

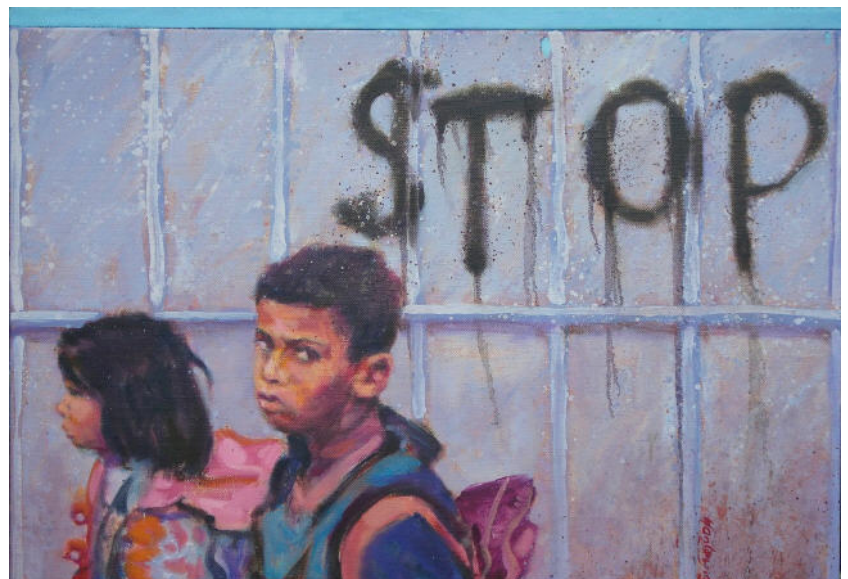

Preview night:

Thursday 1st February, 6pm - 9.30

'When I began this collection, Palestine was hardly ever in the news, and my priority was to change that. Now the exhibition's purpose is to show aspects of Palestinian life 'on the ground', and to raise funds for the Tamer Institute for Community Education, based in Ramallah, a vital lifeline for children denied conventional schooling by the constrictions on travel and of course, the Wall.'
